

NMAT 2011 first view

- There are 120 questions that are needed to be answered in 120 minutes.
- The NMAT test interface is not too different from that of Prometric's CAT test interface.
- Both interfaces display questions one by one and the test-taker can move between questions by clicking on 'Next' and 'Previous' buttons.
- A timer on the left-top side keeps the time.
- Just like you can 'mark' questions for review in the CAT, you 'flag' questions in the NMAT.
- However, the NMAT review screen shows questions separated by sections and also indicated the number of attempts in each section.
- This summary of attempts is a convenience that the CAT interface lacks.
- Unlike in the CAT, you cannot reach the Review screen of the NMAT test from any question in the test.
- You have to reach the last question each time you wish to see the Review screen.
- If we have to pick up one chink in their armor that would be – NOT ABLE TO SWITCH SECTION.
- Everybody wants to be comfortable during the period of the test and getting QA at first makes it a little disadvantageous as for switching section to DI or VA.
- We guess it's better to strategize than to think on your toes. JUST A BACK-UP PLAN IF QA COMES FIRST.
